

Purpose of Education.

"The principal goal of education in the society should be creating men and women, who are capable of doing new things, not simply repeating what other generations have done." Jean Piaget.

The above quote emphasises the author's skillful wording that what should be the prime purpose of education^{is}. Education and its purpose has a rich history and one could say that^{its} a life long journey that empower individuals to reach their full potential, contribute positively to society and navigate the complexities of the world. Moreover, different people have different purpose of education based on their cultural background, socio-economic status, philosophical perspectives, national or regional priorities and serving the humanity. However, according to the Holy Quran, the purpose of education is spiritual development, knowledge, rational thinking good character and understanding the religion. On the other hand, in the words of Rabindranath Tagore the aim of education is to cultivate love for nature and humanity. Therefore, it is hard to describe the single purpose of education, whereas, its main purpose is to guide people about worth and purpose of life.
