

The Transformation of the Middle-Class

In olden times, people belonging to the middle-class were excluded from the Society. Only the people of stature, by heritage or profession, belonged to the Society. The middle class would not acknowledge this and get along with people of similar status to theirs. Ever since, as the middle class has evolved in numbers, so also did its ~~value~~ in respect: They ~~had~~ self-analysed their importance in the Society. They were focused on their own values which were widely respected. However, there will be certain traits which were denounced by the general public of that time.

Their attitude towards lower classes?
