

Precis 2004

Avoid cutting.

Title: Self-discipline: the prerequisite for social relationship

A very important principle one tries to attain is the facilitation of socialization with personality traits. However, it cannot be achieved without considering the personal dominance. Self-resolution helps make good connections with others. For this purpose, self-love is the prerequisite. Without self-knowledge and self-restraint, one cannot know one's potential crucial for self-love. Moreover, the dominance of oneself is the fundamental tool to acquire independence. The actual independence should be achieved prior to making social relationship. The self-realization, and not the words and actions, is the important element for building relationship. This can be developed by emphasizing the establishment of an independent character by realizing one's inner core. Only then, one can prioritize things and make good relations with others.

Actual words = 349

Please include the original passage in the pdf.
Precis words = 119