True Statesman: Navigates The Impossible

A true statesman has the sense of responsibility. He understands what is what is possible and what is impossible. He carefully analyzes the limitations and designs projects accordingly. A judicious statesman does not discriminate between bourgeoisie and capitalist classes - in fact see their inter-connectivity. He influences public opinion in a way that it compliments his efforts of nation building. People might protest against unreasonable policies, but eventually accept a leadership that guides them. He also navigates the impossible situations. He amends laws and reforms the institutions for nation's progress. Mediocre politicians merely devise plans and do not take concrete steps. True statesman focuses

Generally, people think that laws of a nation and freedom of an individual are contrary to each other. Apparently, it does not look wrong. Every law imposes some sort of restrictions on the citizens. If number of laws in a country is large then collective restrictions are also more. With more restrictions, the individual freedom gets suppressed by it. Contrary to this with less ~~laws~~ numbers of laws the freedom of citizens widens.
