C. Conclusion:

"In the state of nature, there was ^{war} of all against all," this is one of the quotes of John Locke, a great philosopher of his era. He had clearly mentioned that in the early stages of humanity, people used to fight among each other. It was the quest and hope for peace that pushed them to unite and surrender their rights to one single sovereign authority who would ensure their basic fundamental rights. It was this hope that led the humanity to achieve wonders in this world. To start with, it is the hope that calls for a collective struggle and at times, even unite the worst enemies in this way. Similarly, it is the hope for sustainable climate that aligned the focus of the countries towards sustainable development goals. Additionally, it is the hope that drives a person to achieve and dream of things that are impossible for others. Moreover, it is the hope that urges a person to stand and fight back even after the greatest setbacks. Furthermore, it is the hope that motivates a poor daily wages to continue with the struggle of life. In the same manner, hope pushes the humanity to stand even against the perpetrators. In a nutshell, behind every action, there is always some sort of hope of achieving some thing that urges people to take ^{that} action.

To start with, hope for achieving a collective goal brings various political parties on a single platform and push them towards a combined effort. Usually, it is very rare that political parties ~~combine~~ ^{unite} for some collective struggle. But, ~~usually~~, we have seen ~~at many~~ times in history that political parties unite in order to restore democracy back in their countries.

Similarly, inflation and other issues of national level also urges the political parties to make a ~~collect~~ collective effort despite the various differences. In 2020, during the COVID-19 pandemic, political parties came together to form the National Coordination Committee (NCC) in order to combat the crisis. Despite the political rivalries, they supported each other in that lockdown, and other steps like financial aid and vaccine distribution. This collaboration clearly underscores the power of collective hope in addressing a shared challenge.

Similarly, the hope of tackling climate change aligned the focus of the countries towards sustainable development goals. It was difficult to bring the issue of climate change under the lime light for all; but, it was the hope for sustainable climate that urged the countries for a collective effort and move towards sustainable development. Similarly, it was the hope for a better future that inspired the countries to align their policies with SDGs, fostering innovation and sustainable development. The COP 26 ~~2020~~ (2021) demonstrated global hope, with more than 150 countries committed to transition from coal to renewable energy, showcasing optimism as a driving force. Hence, ~~as~~ it is evident that it was the hope for better future that led the countries towards a collective struggle against climate change.

Additionally, it is the hope that drives a person to achieve things which seems impossible to others. Hope motivates a person to dream of greater goals and then work hard for achieving it, no matter how much difficult it is in achieving. Without the optimism and belief of success, it is really hard for people to try again and again despite the failures being faced.

by them. A hopeful mindset fuels persistence and innovation to overcome the daunting obstacles coming in the way of achieving something great. Thomas Edison famously said, "I have not failed rather, I have just found 10,000 ways that won't work." This clearly reflects how hope drove him to invent the electric bulb despite repeated failures. In short, greater things can be achieved quite easily, once the hope for achieving it comes inside one's mind.

Moreover, it is the hope that urges a person to stand and fight back even after the greatest setbacks. Hope not only brings in you the positivity, but also helps you in building resilience in your difficult times. It is this optimism inside one that enables him to fight back even if he had failed many of the times. Many of the times, a person comes to quit finally from the struggle of something; but, finally it is the hope that brings in the spark and make people to stand back again. Yuvraj Singh once said, "People quit so quickly after getting fatted in their struggle for a few times. I had to run and practice for the whole year in order to participate in that 100 meters race". This indicates his optimism for record breaking that helps him run and practice throughout the year again and again despite failures and setbacks.

Further more, it is the hope that motivates a poor daily wages to continue with the struggle of life. It is quite difficult to continue your effort daily with the same motivational level. In the same way, a daily wages might not feel well every day, but still the hope for survival keeps him kicking. Optimism for better lifestyle pushes him further harder to even work longer durations than a normal person. In Pakistan, alot of examples can be seen in the villages, where the poor people despite their poor health and bad weather conditions, still go to work daily in hope of earning and achieving some better lifestyle. Hence, it is evident that hope is the driving force behind every poor man's daily struggle.

In the same manner, it is the hope for a better future that pushes humanity to stand against the perpetrators. Standing against perpetrators requires a staunch ^{hope} for something better, else no body would risk their life by going against the perpetrators. It is the hope that inspires the oppressed individuals to rise against the tyranny, believing in the possibility of a fairer society. Similarly, it is the shared vision and hope for change that unites the people against oppression and lead to widespread protests. The South African Anti-Apartheid Movement (1994) was driven by hope for racial equality, leading to the end of apartheid and resulting in Nelson Mandela's presidency. Thus, it is always the hope for a better future that helps you in facing and resisting the oppression with resilience.
