

Title: War: the destroyer of civilizations.

History proves that the main reason for the destruction of ~~war~~ has men has been war. Which comes up very quietly until the disasters can be seen. Historical wars were fought for the achievement of money, arsenal, strength and was thought to have more benefits than loss. The magnitude of war keeps increasing with taking more lives and doing damage. When humans realised the disasters that accompany war ~~they~~^{men} have been trying to avoid it ever since. The choice to refuse participation in any state led war may attract those with passionate, self sacrificing natures as a direct stance against war. The author believes that this can be done by raising awareness among the individuals, in making a single objective for all nations.
