

Education can be a helpful tool to eliminate corruption.

Thesis Statement:

"Education is a powerful tool through which one can transform the world, particularly stamp out the corruption because it cultivates awareness, transparency, critical thinking, ethical values, and accountability. Therefore, firm steps are required to enhance education."

Paragraph:

One cannot deny the fact that education is a powerful tool through which one can eliminate corruption because it raises awareness, promotes transparency, develops critical thinking, enhances accountability, and fosters ethical values. Owing to these reasons, it is quite possible to clamp down the element of corruption. Ishrat Hussain writes in his book, "Governing the Ungovernable" that education not only helps mitigating income inequality and promoting social mobility, but it is also a critical determinant of eliminating corruption. Similarly, Ban Ki-moon, Former Secretary-General of the United States stated that the best way to fight corruption is through education. By emphasizing education, one can cultivate a society that values transparency, accountability, and integrity which will ultimately eliminate corruption.
