

Human development and economic sustainability go hand in hand.

Outlines

A Introduction:

- 1 Definition of human development and economic sustainability
- 2 Importance of human development and economic sustainability
- 3 Thesis statement

B Key Dimensions of Human Development:

- 1 Better living standards
- 2 Peaceful environment
- 3 Education and well-being
- 4 Proper health and sanitation conditions
- 5 Having opportunities of entrepreneurship and jobs
- 6 Freedom of speech and expression

C How Economic growth and Human Development inter-connected?

1 Better facilities and infrastructure urge foreign interest in investment

2 Quality education prepares individuals for having interest in country's affairs

3 Innovative entrepreneurship and job opportunities facilitate economic growth

4 Infrastructure development flourish trade and commerce

5 Peaceful environment encourage's people to make their contributions in economic development.

B Healthy people do more

- work and participate in economic sustainability
- 7 Economic growth is also dependant on fuel and energy resources
 - 8 Freedom of speech can hold check and balance on officials who run economy

D Conclusion

Human development and economic sustainability go hand in hand

Essay

People republic of China was made after couple of years of Pakistan's birth. Officials made their contributions to develop their people as they follow Communism which provides equal rights. Now, world is eye witness of China's economic growth as "second largest economy" by nominal GDP just behind the United States. Human development has much significance for economic growth. The key dimensions of human development are; better living standards, peaceful environment, education and well being. It also include, Proper health and sanitation conditions, having opportunities of entrepreneurship and jobs and freedom of speech and expressions. Human development is directly proportional to economic sustainability as foreign interest in investment, individuals interest in country's affairs, innovative entrepreneurship and job opportunities, trade and commerce, peaceful environment contribute in economic growth. Moreover, healthy people, energy resources and freedom of speech and expression also urge people to participate in economic sustainability. Hence, human development is directly proportional to the economic sustainability because, when people enjoy better living standards they make their contributions in economic growth more dedicatedly.

Beginning with, human development and economic sustainability are the result of better living standards. It is obvious when individuals do not have any fear and they enjoy facilities of life they are more dedicated to their work. So, hard work reaches ^{economy} above the stars.

Peaceful environment is one of the major reasons for economic growth. Human beings enjoy fresh air, no fear of terrorism and other negative impacts of pollution.

Thus, economic growth becomes inevitable for that nation.

Furthermore, education develops thinking and new ideas in minds. These features are crucial for economic growth. Sir Sayed Ahmad Khan said, "education, education, education". Quaid-e-Azam said, "Education is a matter of life and death for us." Quran also prefer educated persons over uneducated. This, helps a country for flourishing.

Also, proper health and sanitation conditions contribute in growth of economy. Countries which are above the equator line enjoys cool weather.

Labors do not have excess sweating. That's why they make work hard. Healthy people do the more work.

To put it briefly, people make more contributions in health.

Further, job opportunities and enterpennesship facilitate a country's economy. China is an example in this context as people of China have their small businesses at domestic level and their GDP growth is continuously increasing. In summary, jobs and businesses helps in sustainable economic growth.

Last but not least, which countries allow to its people freedom of speech and expression, they are more developed. Because people can point out unfavorable policies, Cutting it short, freedom of speech and expression is one of the key dimension of human development.

Though, above discussion is about human development, only but human development is inter-linked with economic sustainability. A brief look of this scenario is presented under.

Firstly, better facilities and better infrastructure urge foreign interest in investment. In year of 2023, almost 15 million people went abroad when they saw other states developed and sustainable.

Shortly, Better infrastructure urge foreigners to go other countries for investment.

Developed nations are always educated. Education creates critical thinking, when masses witness faulty policies they criticize officials for making such policies. In summary, education is very important for a developed economy.

Moreover, more opportunities of jobs and innovative entrepreneurship, facilitate economic growth.

New and innovative ideas of businesses impress other people to do the same.

People do not waste their energies but invest it in work. Thus, economy goes above the stars for that nation.

Similarly, infrastructure like; roads and bridges flourish trade and commerce. As, a country has enough roads they and bridges it can trade with its neighbors. In this way, when a nation makes more exports than its imports, the economy of that state goes high. Even, peaceful environment drives people to 'do work' because, environment is safe. There is no more pollution that's why there is lesser risks of diseases. Thus, people do work hard in that environment.

Also, when health conditions are better in a country, there are ^{enough} facilities related to health, people will enjoy to work there. Health is very important. When health goes, an ill person cannot make his contributions. So, health of masses is very important for a country's prosperity. Even, a country's prosperity is also dependent on fuels and energy resources. Factories work with energy. If there is shortage of fuel and energy, offices will remain close, factories will not work. So, energy is one of the most important in economic growth.

Last but not least, economy runs over people's voices. In a state, which gives freedom of speech to its citizens, people can criticize officials for making wrong policies. Cutting shortly, freedom of speech and expression can allow people to hold check and balance over policies.

In conclusion, it can be firmly asserted that human development and economic growth go hand in hand. Human development is directly proportional to the economic sustainability, because when people enjoy facilities of life they make more contribution in country's growth.

Economic growth and human development are inter-linked with each other; better facilities urge foreign interest in investment, people have interest in country's affairs, economic growth is also depend on energy resources and peopleful environment also encourage people to participate in development of economy. Beside this connection, these are some dimensions of human development; better living standards, education and well being and opportunities of having jobs and entrepreneurship, are also

"Economic growth and human development are interdependent. One cannot sustain the other."

JS