Q7. Translation:

To find hidden flaws, one should pay attention to what enemies say. Friends, out of love, often praise us in ways that please us. They might not notice our faults or may hide them to avoid hurting our feelings. On the other hand, enemies observe us closely and point out our flaws, even from the smallest details. Though their criticism may come from hatred and make small faults seem bigger, it usually contains some truth. Friends magnify virtues but enemies expose faults. Therefore, we should value enemies more because they help us see our weaknesses. In this way, an enemy can sometimes be more helpful than a friend.
