I, along with my friend John, planned a trip to Cherokee, a county in the state of Oklahoma during my vacation last May. There, we visited a town named Qualla Boundary. It presented a breathtaking sight with mountains all around. The traditional lifestyles of Indians, tribal crafts and their historical pageant gave a complete picture of Cherokee in 18th century. We also visited the Souvenir shops, which sold rubber tomahawks, war bonnets, teepees and tents made from animal skin. There, we befriended a local, George, with whom we had lunch. He told us that besides trade, "Bingo weekend" is a useful means of income for Cherokees during off-tour seasons. There was a large Bingo Hall, where people can play different types of games. It earns them a good amount. At last, we visited the town's museum.
