Title: The Dream of Martin Luther King.

Martin Luther had a dream that one day that nation would rise up and live its ideology of equality. The sons of slaves and owners would sit together. One day the Mississippi, a state of injustice and oppression would be converted into free and just state. Luther had a dream that his children would live in a nation where they would not be judged. One day the racist state Alabama would transformed into racism free state. One day all disputes would be annihilated and the glory of God would be revealed in terms of equality and brotherhood. Luther went back to the South with this hope and faith. He had a dream that with this hope, they would be transfigured into nation of brotherhood.
