A trip to Cherokee

The author had difficulty choosing an exciting tour destination as Hong Kong and Australia were common choices. He started preparations for John's suggested trip to Cherokee. They went to a town called Qualla Boundary, full of beautiful and historical colours, which reflects the lifestyle of the 18th century. With the help of natives, they found tourists' shops where plenty of things were available. They also had lunch there with a man George who did a hard job for living. The author considered their job harder than theirs. They do not only depend on trade. In case of low ~~tourism~~ <sup>tourism</sup>, people tried other ways of earning like "Bingo Event" in which people play different games to earn money. Finally, they visited a museum full of arts. The author missed the place and decided to visit another exciting place.
