

(CSS 2000 Precis)

Abeha Fakhar

Emergence of the Middle Class of 9th Century

According to Besant, the middle class of 9th century did not belong to any society. They were not recognized by upper class society even if they were professionals. Later, the middle class realized its worth and created their own society. Their change increased their impact. Being familiar with upper class lifestyle, they were more concerned about the trouble of the poor and importance of values of their own society.

Although they had diverse opinions on respectability of specific conventions known universally; but still they were very humble and respectful.

Total words in passage: 280 words

Total words in Precis: 89 words