

Population : a neglected problem

Population growth is one such problem that is deliberately ~~not~~ overlooked in modern-day sociology. It is essential to have some rational regulation for population management in case the state fails to control it. In ^{the} absence of natural checks, population will be unrestrained, crossing the optimum number. This would lower the standard of living. Resultantly, the segment of population with a sense maintaining the standard of living will restrict new births to the point that they are lower than death rates. In contrast, the segment that holds no potential of being society's useful members will dominate the population. Giving this problem its due importance is not in the personal interests of the society's key stakeholders. They derive the validity of their excuses from religious perspective by supporting ancient theory of natural rights. Experience, as oppose to socialist calculation, suggest that revolutions are driven by aspiration rather than desperation.

Words in passage : 417

Words in precis : 146

Answer 1

This passage is from science fiction story because the "thing" described in it has features that cease to exist in the real world. Furthermore, the writing style of the passage is narrative, which tends to be in fiction stories.

Answer 2

The crowd was behaving curious and excited about what was in the pit. However, at the same time, it also felt scared about what might come out of the pit.

Answer 3

The mood of the crowd altered because it saw a grey snake coming out of the middle of the pit with thickness equivalent of a walking ~~stick~~ stick. It filled them with horror as this creature came out in the air, and moved itself towards them.

Answer 4

The narrator's initial reaction to the thing was one of horror. He was frightened and scared.

DATE: ___/___/___

Answer 5

The writer felt disgusted at the intense and monstrous appearance of the thing that came out of the pit. It ~~was~~ had rounded head and v-shaped mouth. It ~~had no brow ridges~~, ~~no lower lips~~ did not have brow ridges, lower lips and chins. Its mouth constantly quivered dropping saliva, and it moved heavily in a nasty way. It has two large eyes ~~+~~ filled with intensity. Its skin had something like fungicide on it.