ESSAY.

From childhood, women are listening from their grandmothers or society. That men are the breadwinner and women are the homemaker. From history till date, the core responsibility of women is to take care of home. When we look back in the history, the time period of colonialism in subcontinent or America. Men are the one who went for the war and fight for their country whereas women are left behind in the home. This perception start moving from one generation to another, and eventually it takes place as the society perception. Women from birth are taught how to cook, homechores, sewing clothes. The only thing in women's mind are pleased that they are meant to be at home. But now a days, things are changing. Women are fighting for their basic rights. Women are asking for gender equality where they have their own individual personality, where they are not know only as a homemaker. Due to the society perception of women's of being in a home, gives them the personalistic responsibility of being a homemaker. where, they have to take care of all the home chores, regardless of that women are more capable and can not be bounded by the cultural norms. If we look in our surroundings our mother, grand mother and grand grand mother are all homemakers. And they have been taught that taking care of home is the only choice and being respected in the society.

~~The~~ another responsibility which is only associated with the women is to take care of the kids. women's have to nourish and ~~to~~ take care of their kids need. The role of co-parenting doesn't exist in the history, as per the cultural norms it's a female trait. These female traits also play a role in shaping the woman's responsibility and describe that the roles of men and female. Usually we have seen women's in the parent's teacher meeting as women's have the sole responsibility to take care of the children's well-being.
