It is in the temperate countries of northern Europe that the beneficial effects of cold are most manifest. A cold climate seems to stimulate energy by acting as an obstacle. In the face of an insuperable obstacle our energies are numbed by despair, the total absence of obstacles, on the other hand leaves no room for the exercise and training of energy, but a struggle against difficulties that we have a fair hope of over-coming, calls into active operation all our powers. In like manner, while intense cold numbs human energies and a hot climate affords little motive for exertion, moderate cold seems to have a bracing effect on the human race. In a moderately cold climate man is organied in arduous, but no hopeless

Struggles and with the inclemency of the weather. He has to build strong houses and procure thick clothes to keep himself warm. To supply fuel for his fires, he must hew down trees and dig coal out of the earth. In the open air, unless he moves quickly, he will suffer pain from the biting wind. Finally, in order to replenish the expenditure of bodily tissues caused by his necessary exertions, he has to produce for himself plenty of nourishing food.

Quite different is the lot of man in the tropics. In the neighbourhood of the equator there is little need of clothes or fire, and it is possible with perfect comfort and no danger to health, to pass the livelong day stretched out on the bare ground beneath the shade of a tree. A very little fruit or vegetable food is required to sustain life under such circumstances, and that little can be obtained without much exertion from the boundaries, earth.

In Northern Europe, winter weather makes the life fine. Humans feel comfortable in absence of difficulties while hardship creates more troubles to work because it minimizes energy. Normal cold weather gives physical energy and power to works more productively. People belonging to normal cold weather ^{work} with ease and manage to keep their houses warm by using clothes accordingly. They enjoy sunny weather in an open area having delicious meals. The people in equatorial region hardly need some clothes to wear where they spend their day under a shady tree with limited food. Life changes as per the change of the season. The summer weather makes life difficult while the winter weather makes it easier and more comfortable for the people to manage their affairs.
