- The Biggest Evil is not Laziness But Lacking virtues

The evil in today's world is the outcome of people who are lazy and do not know what to do. The author can imagine the Satan, being the busiest creature and not wasting any time. The author believes laziness alone can not bring the world into a disorganized state.

It lacks kindness and balance.

There are energetic people but mostly lead astray. For instance, in July 1914, when government officials out of nowhere went on to do nothing, then we would have been rich by now. But no, without wasting time, must do something. Again, assume, the Officials with ill-conceived ideas rather worrying to Versailles, ^{should} had taken off from all the hustle for two weeks and come again with fresh energy.

At present, if some politicians declare being lazy a crime, we will gain by it. Very often some religious groups hold conferences, but with evils so high up the future of civilization is unclear. The people who attend these conferences restrict women's clothes and bands. These people should be doing nothing but staring at the sky to get sanity.
