

Title:

The Difficulties in Dealing with Children

Precis:

Educationalists today give little value to the pleasures of being in children's company. If handled with care as opposed to forcefulness, children obey you without getting bitter. A child is unappreciative of an interest that is for the sake of a social relationship or any expectations about the future. The preferred sort of interest is the one that exists without any underlying motive, and simply for the sake of their presence. Unfortunately, that is hard to achieve as teachers are over-worked and cannot maintain a natural liking for children. Since dealing with children is tiresome, teaching should be limited to two hours a day. If not, it can cause irritation in the already stressed teacher. Only self-control cannot preserve friendliness and where it exists, it is above all rules and guided by impulse. Hence, love and care are necessary when dealing with children.
