

Q- It is easier to make constitution than to run it. Discuss in light of Politics Administration dichotomy?

A- Introduction

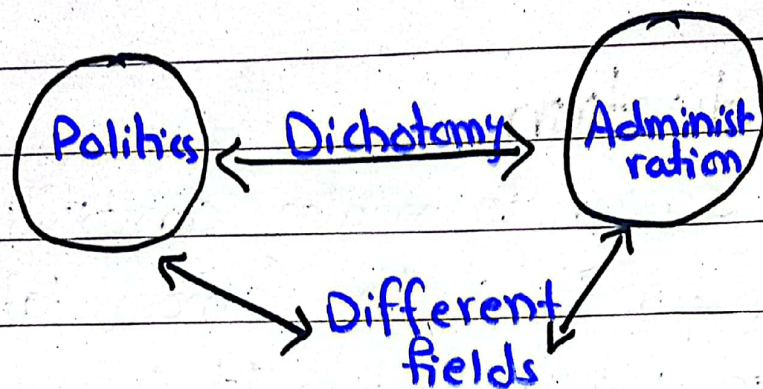

"It is easier to make constitution than to run it" is the famous statement in public administration. It is quoted by Woodrow Wilson, 28th President of USA. He gave the concept of politics administration dichotomy that is his major contribution in the field of public administration.

Politics - Administration Dichotomy

Woodrow Wilson wrote an essay titled as "The study of administration" in which he presented the idea of politics administration dichotomy in 1877. According to him, the administration is like a business administration that must be free from the strife of politics. He advocated that politics and and administration are two separate domains which cannot be blended.

Politics Conception

Politics includes the process of formulating and devising public policies. It is being done by elected leaders which are politicians by nature.

Administration

Administration includes civil servants and other administrative staff, concerned with the execution of public policies.

Woodrow Wilson has separated politics from administration for boosting up the efficiency and effectiveness of administration.

Moreover, he stated that constitution is easy to make than to run it. As, elected politicians make constitution through legislative process. Formulation of constitution involves setting the roadmap for running the state affairs. It is devised after deliberate discussions, analysis etc keeping in view provisions of constitution. Administrators can't only perform their responsibility

in a befitting and appropriate manner if they are free from any sort of political influence and pressure. An independent administration is mandatory
for running constitution.
