Consequences Of the Cold Weather

The given Passage describes the consequences of the extreme cold weather in the temperate countries of northern Europe.

The intense cold climate lessens the human's efforts however, humans are motivated and most likely to work in hot and moderately cold weather.

In order to cope with intense cold they adapt some strategies to protect themselves from the dangerous effects of cold climate.

On the other hand, the life in the tropics is much easier because they require little human needs.

And the same differences can also be recognized in our different seasons of year.
