

Climate Impacts on Man

The temperate region of Northern Europe urges to consider the cold climate is favourable to human progress. The cold climate act as a hurdle that boost up human energies and provokes human beings to work actively. On the other hand, when there is no hardships one's activeness is down. In cold climate, men do extreme efforts to keep themselves alive. They do hard work for food and warmth. The struggle for life makes them active. Contrarily, in hot climates, a very little effort is required to ensure life. A person can easily acquire these little necessities without any hard struggle. Alike the climate, different seasons also have varying impacts on human nature. In summer, one is stress free but in winter one makes labours mentally and physically.

word count: 127