

Beauty lies in the eyes of beholder

A painter was drawn a picture with his utmost skill. He wanted to please this picture by whole world. He exposed the picture in public with the instruction to identify the flaws. In the result, he found many blots of disapprobation. On the next day, he performed that activity again with the instruction to identify beauties of the picture and then he found many marks of approbation. Therefore, he understood that he cannot please everyone at a time.
