

Title: Challenges of Mankind.

—: 6/5

Throughout the history of mankind has faced two kinds of challenges that are imposed by external nature, and, the human being misdirectly caused to each other. Progressively the two biological advantages that gave him supremacy were the upright posture freed his hands and intelligence. The population increased than any other mammal but nature demand from majority of mankind continuous effort in securing of daily meals. In present day, with the help of growing scientific intelligence we are able to prevent pandemic caused by the external nature. But the miseries that are imposed on each other have not reduced in the same manner. Power seeking nature of man causes the restlessness in the world and this fear is still the prominent motive in very many lives. 125.

Precis: A grocer once had a beautiful parrot that was a good guard for his shop and increased his sales by entertaining the customers. One day, in his struggle to protect himself from cat, he dropped a few almond oil bottles drenching himself and the floor. On seeing this mess/disorder, the grocer ^{already oppressed} hit the parrot with his full power in anger and he instantly dropped all his feathers on his head. This incident made parrot entirely silent. The grocer lamented upon his action, He started doing good deeds in hope that he might be forgiven, and after sometime he came into luck. A bald dervish walked into the shop and the parrot asked him if he had also spilled the bottle of almond oil. The customers in the shop smiled at his innocence and one of the customers advised the parrot never to compare two actions with each other despite their similarity.
