Cure of Envy

Envy is the worst characteristic of human nature. The envious person not only wishes but also acts to harm others and stays dissatisfied. Instead of being content with his possessions, he gets discontented with what others have. If envy stays for long it can become fatal to the person's virtue and talent.

It is not the answer to the existing disparities. Luckily, admiration, a good characteristic of human nature could be a path to banish jealousy. Self-sacrifice a mean of saints is an impoacticle. However a common man can get rid of it through happiness, though this is itself a hurdle to happiness. Through conscious effort one can cure envy.

Manto unravels societal complexities

Manto was caught in the web of moral indecisiveness of society as his critics accused him of filthiness and questioned the morality of his work. He continued his work of unravelling the dissolute society with complacency and determination. His work reflected his concern for the handicapped and his characters expressed normally with their good and evil sides. He delivered his thoughts without faking morality. He was conscious and vexed by the discrepancies in society and with a balanced approach towards human nature he cautiously wrote about obscenity. He reflected unrest of young people by breaking barriers.
