Cultural diversity and integration are two crucial concepts in discussing the emergence of nation states. Though both seems to be opposite in nature, their co-existence is possible. Cultural diversity represents the presence of different communities in the world, while their integration is difficult yet significant in developing a peaceful world. As per the saying of Michael Joseph Duplin in the International Growth Centre, "Different cultures exist in societies. They are the beauty of a nation. However, this beauty could only be retained by promoting their peaceful integration."

Several ways are there to ensure the coexistence of cultural diversity and integration. One of the foremost methods is to respect the principle of unity in diversity. Along with this, the promotion of economic diplomacy is another tool to harmonize the diverse groups. In the realm of contemporary challenges of climate change, terrorism and artificial intelligence, the mutual concourse of different societies is the significant factor that could avert these emerging menace.

However, there are certain threats that hinder the intermingling of different cultures. The rise of xenophobic sentiments and populism are the formidable dangers that present obstacles in smooth integration of distinct cultures. Therefore, some mitigating steps could be considered to harmonize the peaceful intermingling.

Promoting the United Nations principle of peaceful co-existence and encouraging the collective approach to tackle the emerging threats are some suggestions in this regard. These measures, if acted sagaciously, could enable the diverging states to follow smooth trajectory towards peaceful harmonization.

While discussing the methods of peaceful existence of different societies, it is crucial to understand the nexus between cultural diversity and integration. Cultural diversity represents the presence of diverse communities having unique ideologies, rituals and traditions. These beliefs, concepts and perception about the world also differ from each other. To ensure the tranquility among such diversity seems to be unsurmountable task. Despite having difficulty, their integration is the only solution to promote a conducive environment to live in. The understanding the common factors is necessary pathway in the domain of harmonized world, which could fulfill the task of their mutual co-existence.
