economic growth with distributive justice into four. However, there are some effective measures to ensure economic growth with distributive justice. Therefore, global leadership must take these measures for ensuring distributive justice for healthy economic growth and peaceful society.

To begin with, economic growth without distributive justice results in political instability. This economic growth with distributive justice and political stability go hand in hand. Political stability ensures friendly environment for all segments of the society by providing equal opportunities. However, distributive injustice in allocation of economic resources leads to political instability. This political unrest undermines provision of equal chances members of the economic injustice creates resentment among people. Violence prevails in it can be said growth without distributive justice breeds the menace of instability which Along political instability, in distribution of resources provides fertile ground for corruption. This rampant social divide between class dominates. This social divide breaks social contract and leads to anarchy. Resultantly, the concept of elite. This the social fabric of equal chances for all members of the society. This economic injustice creates a sense of resentment among people. As a result, violence prevails in a country. Thus, it can be said that economic growth without distributive justice breeds the menace of political instability which enhances violence.

Along with chronic political instability, distributive injustice in distribution of economic benefits provides fertile ground for rampant corruption. This rampant corruption promotes social divide because the rich class dominates in economic domain. This social divide disturbs the social contract by creating anarchy. Resultantly, public protest against corrupt elite. This protest destroys the social fabric of life. The monarch of the France was killed owing to his control over economic resources. This explicit manifestation of the fact that economic growth without distributive justice breeds violence.

Likewise promotes corruption, it also hampers the way of innovation by decreasing Foreign Direct Investment (FDI). Economic growth with free and fair justice attracts foreign investors to invest their money in a country. This investment brings modernization and enhances efficiency of economic sectors. As a result, government becomes able to invest economic benefits for public welfare. On the other hand, unfair distribution of economic resources not only creates hurdles in the way of Foreign Direct Investment but also increases violence. The main reason of lack of investment and violence is distributive injustice. According to Economic Survey of Pakistan, Pakistan received 1.22 billion dollars investment in fiscal year 2022 but received 688 million dollars ^{in 2021}. This is the testimony of the fact that economic growth without distributive justice decreases Foreign Direct Investment which results in violence.

In addition to decreasing Foreign Direct Investment, economic growth without distributive justice leads to poverty. In presence of distributive injustice, distribution of economic resources in free and fair manner remains an elusive dream. Consequently, the poor class of the society faces economic problem.

in order to manage their basic needs of life. This economically depressed class of the society commits crimes in order to fulfill their needs. According to a study done by "World Vision" that the level of poverty in a society is directly proportional to the crime rate. Hence, economic growth without distributive justice breeds violence.

Apart from increasing poverty, distributive injustice opens the room for unemployment. The economic injustice makes government unable to generate suitable job opportunities in order to absorb growing work force. train them in order to create social unrest. For instance, the Islamic State Republic of Iraq and Syria,
a terrorist organization, employs graduates of some of the best universities of the world. This only happens due to unemployment. Therefore, it can be argued that economic growth without distributional justice opens the room
for unemployment which breeds
violence.

Besides growing unemployment, economic growth without justice enhances inequality. Economic inju-stice hinders the way of provision of equal opportunities to all the constituents of a society.

This unequal provision of chances increases class disparity. Class disharmony promotes chaos in a society. The ongoing political and economic turmoil in the land of the Poor is an outcome of absence of distributive injustice. In short, economic growth without distributive justice increases inequality in a society which breeds violence.

Over and above increasing inequality, economic discrimination also paves the way for gender equality. In order to achieve gender parity equal opportunities for all the genders are necessary. The provision of equal chances only possible when distributive justice prevails in a society. The prevalence of economic growth with distributive justice ensures peace and prosperity in a society. On the other hand, economic injustice aggravates discrimination in a society. Domestic violence becomes order of the day because economic injustice promotes gender inequality which ^{enables} makes men to dominate. This domination provides fertile ground for domestic violence. According to a study conducted by "The Pink Foundation" that economic domination is one of the main driving factor behind increasing incidents of domestic violence. Therefore, it can be said that economic growth without distributive justice breeds violence.

Aside from gender inequality, economic growth without distributive justice breeds the menace of intolerance. Economic liberalism with fair distribution of economic resources plays crucial role in ensuring tolerance in a society. Tolerance brings har-mony in a society. This harmony hampers the way of violence. As a result, sustainable economic growth bears its fruit. However, economic growth without distributive justice leads to intolerance. This intolerance disturbs social fabric of life and gives birth to violence because people do not have equitable provision of social facilities such as health, education and security. This indicates economic growth without distributive justice enhances violence.

Last but not the least, economic growth without justice curtails freedom of expression. Freedom of speech plays a vital role in bringing tolerance and innovation in a society. Furthermore, it also ensures distributive justice in economic growth.

However, in the prevalence of economic injustice freedom of expression does not bear its fruits because economic growth without distributive justice creates hindrances in the way of free speech. These restrictions on freedom of speech result in violence because people do not have opportunities to express their concerns.

Therefore, it can be said that economic growth under the shadow of distributive injustice breeds violence.

After discussing how economic growth without distributive justice breeds violence, it becomes pertinent here to shed light on causes responsible for distributive injustice.

Weak judicial system is a leading cause of distributive injustice ^{it} plays ineffective role in keeping checks on law making bodies. As a result, law making bodies make ^{weak} laws. These weak laws result in distributive injustice. Moreover, interpretation of laws in true letter and spirit remains an elusive dream. Countries like, the United States of America with strong justice system has strong distributive justice system. On the other hand, Pakistan has weak judicial ^{system} owing to this reason distributive injustice prevails in the land of the poor. Therefore, it can be argued that weak judicial system is a main cause of distributive injustice which hampers the way of economic growth and enhances violence.

Apart from weak judicial system, absence of rule of Law is another reason of economic injustice. Rule of law is essential for economic growth with fair allocation of resources. Unfortunately, in the absence of rule of law equal distribution of economic resources remains an elusive dream. Reusantly, ^{the} rich class of a country reaps more benefits as compare to the poor class of a country. This divide is ^a ~~the~~ fact of the manifestation that absence of rule of law paves the way for distributive injustice which gives birth violence.

In addition to ~~mass~~ absence of rule of law, mass illiteracy is also adding fuel to the fire of economic ~~injustice~~. Educated people have the ability to understand of their rights and duties.

However, uneducated people do not have the capacity to understand of their rights and duties. This unawareness opens the room for incompetent people to dominate in economic domain. As a result, economic growth is under distributive injustice becomes order of the day. This lack of awareness owing to mass illiteracy also enhances violence in a society because ignorant people rule ignorantly. Letting the long argument short that mass illiteracy lies at the core of the causes of distributive injustice.

As every cloud has silver lining, similar is the case with causes of distributive injustice in allocation of economic resources.

Following paragraphs will present some suggestion to overcome the distributive ^{is} ~~in~~ ^{is} ~~in~~ justice.

Provision of enlightened education is first and foremost step in order to curb the monster of distributive injustice in economic domain.

Education can make people able to understand their rights and duties. Furthermore, it can also spread awareness among masses about distributive justice.

Resultantly, distributive justice must prevail in distribution of economic resources. As someone has rightly said, "Education is the most powerful weapon through which you can change the whole world."

Therefore, education is the first step to nip the menace of distributive injustice in the bud to ensure sustainable economic growth.

Along with provision of enlightened education. ^{strong} ^{judicial} system is also ^{strong} ^{strong} necessarily. ^{strong} judicial system can ensure ^{true}

interpretation of law. ^{true} ^{inter} -pretation of law can hamper the way of violation of fundamental human rights such as ^{underrepresentation}
of all segments of a ^{society}.
Consequently, pluralism can ^{prevail}
in all spheres of ^{life}. ^{This} ^{preva-}
-lence of pluralism can promote economic ^{growth} with distributive justice. Therefore, government should take concrete measures to introduce ^{structural}
-ural reforms in judicial ^{system}.
Hence, strong judicial system is directly needed to ensure equitable distribution of economic resources in order ^{to} achieve peace in the ^{society}.

Apart from strong judicial system, the state around the globe must ensure provision of fundamental human rights.

They must protect their women and minorities and provide the equal opportunities in every walk of life. They must deal effectively against any violation of human right. This would send a message to all people that they must respect their women and minorities. Resultantly, distributive injustice would wipe out from the society paving the way for peaceful society. Therefore, states around the globe must ensure provision of fundamental rights at any cost.

last but not the least, constructive role of media is also essential. Media role can go a long way in bringing distributive justice to end violence from the society. This may also promote importance of economic growth with distributive justice.

It can highlight criminal negligence of government in ensuring fair distribution of economic resources.

In this way, media can play its positive role in bringing distributive justice to end violence from the society.

To cap it all, it can be said that economic growth without distributive justice breeds violence by creating anarchy in socio-economic and political domain of life. The prevalence of economic injustice is owing to weak judicial system, absence of rule of law and mass illiteracy. Therefore, there is need of the hour to take pragmatic

If the world fails to take these
