Great nations win without fighting

Martin Luther King said about great nations, "Ultimately a great nation is a compassionate nation." Great nations win without fighting because the nations who have well-thought-out in the present age are able to become progressive nations.

Great nations are those nations who use different skills and wisdom for development instead of war. Great nations possess various qualities such as diplomacy, technological advancement, economic prowess, nationalism, etc. that make these nations to win without resorting to military conflict.

Throughout history, successful nations have often demonstrated that true strength lies in unity, strategic alliances and cultural connections. For example, Japan welcomed over 232000 international students in recent years which shows its growth. Similarly, China focused on its economy and became a second-largest economy in the world. It is important for countries to take appropriate measures to succeed rather than fighting.
