1) Comprehension Passage:

In the small village of Evergreen, the arrival of spring was celebrated with a festival that marked the end of winter and the beginning of the growing season. This festival, known as the "Spring Awakening," had been a tradition for over a century. Villagers would decorate their homes with vibrant flowers and colorful ribbons, and the air would be filled with the aroma of freshly baked bread and pies.

One of the highlights of the festival was the annual flower parade, where villagers dressed in costumes made entirely of flowers and marched through the streets. Children would eagerly participate, donning their own flower crowns and carrying baskets filled with petals to scatter along the parade route. The festival also featured a series of competitions, including a bake-off, a best-dressed pet contest, and a storytelling event where elders shared tales of the village's past.

Despite its charm, the festival faced challenges in recent years. With the rise of modern technology and busy lifestyles, fewer people were able to attend or participate. The village council had been working hard to rejuvenate the festival, introducing social media campaigns and engaging local businesses to sponsor various activities. Their efforts were beginning to show promise, as attendance numbers slowly started to rise, and the sense of community began to rekindle.
