

8th October, 2024

Qno-1) Differentiate between women's studies and Gender studies.

Answer

Introduction:

Gender studies and women studies are two different academics though they share some commonalities but they are different from each other in terms of race, ethnicity, class and sexuality.

Definition:

Gender studies is an interdisciplinary term that defines people's race, class, gender, sex, sexuality and social discrimination. Women's studies on the other hand deals with social structural issues relating women gender and empowerment only.

Gender studies deals with issues relating all genders including women but women's studies include issues for women only.

Let's discuss how these two disciplines are different from each other.

Emergence:

Gender studies is an offshoot of 3rd wave of Feminism and emerged in the late 1970's. It was a response to women studies including aspects such as ethnicity, sex and sexuality. Women's studies on the other hand, emerged in the early 1960's a movement basically to raise awareness against women roles in the society.

Merging other disciplines:

Do not use one word headings. They should be elaborate and self explanatory

This shows lack of women roles at higher positions and give a chance for women to come forward creating more opportunities. Gender studies in contrast to give rise to GAD approach (Gender and Development)

Add and highlight references against these examples

This give rise to all genders including women to create a equality in society aims to remove injustice and leads gender towards development.

Scope:

Gender studies has a wide scope and diverse as it covers almost all aspects of gender including Queer, LGBT etc. Women's studies on the other hand are less diverse as it only talks about women related issues only.

Aims :

Use specific headings specifying the difference between the two

Gender studies aims to remove injustice from society bring equality and equal opportunities for everybody. It is not only conceded to raising awareness or consciousness only but also creating policies, merging with other disciplines to bring its aim peacefully into the society. Women's studies on the other hand, aims for a society where women are empowered their consent matters from reproductive to other issues of health as well. Where women are given equal opportunities and removing gender disparity. It is a conservative field that remains to women and their well being only.

Jobs:

Gender studies and women studies students has a range of Jobs.

Gender studies students can work as an analyst, gender analyst, advocacy, government officers etc.

Women studies students can work as women hygiene officers, women analyst, advocacy officers.

Conclusion:

Add more arguments

Hence, it is proved that gender studies and women studies are two different disciplines they are different from each other through definition, historical background, scope, aim and in terms of professional fields as well.

Though they share some commonalities as well. These two disciplines are necessary for a Equality based and peaceful society that can lead towards growth.

A 20 marks answer should have around 15 subheadings and be on 7-9 pages