

Q. 3. Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions given at the end.

(20)

Civil society refers to all of the places where individuals gather together to have conversations, pursue common interests and, occasionally, try to influence public opinion or public policy. In many respects, civil society is where people spend their time when they are not at work or at home. For example, a group of people gather at a local park every Thursday afternoon for a game of football. Most of them arrive well before the game begins and stay for some time after it ends. Some of them go out for dinner or a drink after the game. In the course of their meetings they talk about a wide range of topics, including football but also extending to include issues such as work, family, relationships, community events, racial issues and politics. This kind of solidarity can be found in a variety of other places in civil society – such as sports clubs, bowling leagues, reading groups and social movements – where individuals get together to associate on the basis of some shared interest fostering more effective forms of citizenship. Even though people may come together on the basis of an interest they all share in common, they eventually have to develop productive strategies for dealing with conflicts and differences that emerge within the association. Team mates in a bowling league discover, on certain issues, significant differences of opinion. And yet, because they value the association and look forward to participating in its activities, they do not respond to these differences by exiting the scene. Instead, they search for the ways of interacting that will not threaten the solidarity of the group. In the process, they learn to appreciate and to tolerate social differences, a valuable skill to have in an increasingly multicultural nation. They also develop a general sense of social trust and mutual obligation, which makes society function more efficiently (this is what political scientists and sociologists are talking about when they refer to the importance of social capital). Gathering together in an association, people begin to think about their shared private interest as a collective public interest, and they try to make sure that this public interest is safe and secured. For example, the group that gets together for a weekly football game begins to talk about the park as an important community resource; if feel that the park is being mistreated or mismanaged, will organize a ‘save the park’ campaign to try to influence their local politicians and the other residents of the community. Recently, there has been growing concern that civil society is weaker than it used to be, because people are losing interest in joining associations. As citizens become increasingly disconnected from voluntary associations, they will experience less trust and less social connection, and as a result political institutions will function less efficiently. However, some scholars opine that many people are simply choosing to participate in different kinds of associations with fewer face-to-face meetings but supplemented with ‘virtual’ interactions facilitated by resources.

Page 1 of 2

ENGLISH (PRECIS & COMPOSITION)

Questions:

(4 marks each)

1. How does the author characterize the concept of civil society?
2. Why does civil society strive towards better socialization driven by tolerance?
3. What do you understand by the term 'Social Capital' used in this passage?
4. Why does a civil society assume the role of a public stake holder?
5. What impact is feared by the weakening state of civil society?

Reading Comprehension (2022)

Q1: How does the author characterize the concept of civil society?

Ans: The Author refers to civil society as a group of individuals which greatly influences the public opinion of government policies. Civil society also means that people gather for common interests and discuss strategies in this regard. Parks and sport clubs are the common platforms for citizens to discuss the issues of society.

Q2: Why does civil society strive towards better socialization driven by tolerance?

Ans: Civil society ^{strives} towards better socialization for securing the its interests. ~~to threaten~~ ^{threatening} civil society members avoid the solidarity of the association for the efficient functioning of the association. Seeing shared private goals as public interests is also one of the main causes of civil societies. They strive towards better bondage.

Q3: What do you understand by the term "social capital" used in this passage?

Ans: Gathering of individuals in an association is for securing the shared interests is called social capital. It also refers to the social trust and sense of responsibility for seeking common objectives among the members of any group or association.

Q4: Why does civil society assume the role of a public stake holder?

Ans: Civil society acts as public stake holder in order to seek public support for shared interests and common goals. Moreover, the association stands on the behalf of common people. Civil society members use public card for achieving the collective objectives.

Q5: What impact is feared by the weakening state of civil society?

Ans: In this era of technology, individuals prefer virtual meetings over physical interactions. Therefore, it is feared in public that civil society's power will be weakened gradually. As a result, people will fail to seek their collective interests.

lack of check on political institutions