

The Menace of child Labour

A garden without flowers and the earth without children is not worth seeing. Flowers and children are meant to be the ultimate reason to live on earth, as both intensify its beauty. Over the past decades children have not been receiving proper nourishment and as a result their progress is fading away day by day. Every child has the right to live and enjoy ~~freely~~ their independence freely. Unfortunately, they are entangled in a menace that has snatched away their very source of happiness: child labour.

According to the International Labour Organisation 2023 report, around 160 million children are prone to child labour, proving that it is not a regional but a global issue that has affected millions of lives. According to the international law. child labour is a heinous crime which must be addressed on global forums like the UNO. moreover, forced to work day and night many are driven into prostitution to meet their needs showing that their future is ~~not~~ being protected not only mentally but physically too. As a result or to end child labour regardless of cultural norms and values every member of society must play their part. As these 160 million children can get basic human rights and a decent standard of living which includes the right to education, health, proper childhood and the ability to dream big for their future. Only then the spirit of this earth can be restored and everyone can feel its beauty once more.
