

4. People say that money and physical strength are instruments of power. In olden times, a man with the strongest body was considered to be the natural leader of his tribe. Today, a man of wealth and money commands considerable influence in society. If he cannot get what he wants, he will buy it with his money. But we must admit that knowledge is a far greater power than money or physical strength. It is with this power that man controls the oceans, travels across space, and can blast a mountain to lay a railway line.

But knowledge does not give brute force alone. It is a power in the moral and intellectual sphere also. It enables man to distinguish between right and wrong and good and evil. It helps him to meet dangers and difficulties with courage and confidence. But we must admit that knowledge can be a power for evil also. In war, one country may destroy another country with the help of nuclear weapons. Thus knowledge must be used for the good of humanity alone; then it will prove to be a blessing for mankind.
