Human nature and climate

Human nature varies in temperate and tropical climate. In temperate climate, man utilizes most of its energy. The usage of energy depends on the intensity of climate. In hot and extremely cold weather, man does not utilize his energy. But in moderate cold, man uses most of its energy as he has to perform arduous tasks in order to sustain his life. He even has to nourish his body with food to provide him enough strength. However, in tropical climate, man's behavior is quite different. His life is more at ease. He can spend his whole day under the shade of a tree. He even has to eat less food as he is not engaged in any hard work. In different seasons of the year, the same differences can be seen in man.
