SAMPLE I

He fed the hungry wanderer and dispatched him singing on the way, with meat in his wallet and coins in his purse. His parishoners when in need of money had only to repair to his study and were sure of an immediate supply. He was indeed the banker of his village and what he neither expected nor wished to be returned. (Total Words: 61).

Write a précis of the following passage and also suggest a suitable title.

I think modern educational theorists are inclined to attach too much importance to the negative virtue of not interfering with children and too little to the positive merit of enjoying their company. If you have the sort of liking for children that many people have for horses and dogs, they will be apt to respond to your suggestions, and to accept prohibitions, perhaps with some good humored grumbling, but without resentment. It is no use to have the sort of liking that exists in regarding them as a field for a valuable social endeavour, or what amounts to the same thing as an outlet for power impulses. No child will be grateful for an interest in him that springs from the thought that he will have a vote to be secured for your party or a body to be sacrificed to king and country.

The desirable sort of interest is that which exists in spontaneous pleasure in the presence of children without any ulterior purpose. Teachers who have this quality will seldom need to interfere with children's freedom, but will be able to do so, when necessary, without causing psychological damage.

Unfortunately, it is utterly impossible for the overworked teachers to preserve an instinctive liking for the children: they are bound to come to feel towards them as the proverbial confectioner's apprentice does towards macaroons. I do not think that education ought to be anyone's whole profession. It should be undertaken for at most two hours a day by people whose remaining hours are spent away from children. The society of the young is fatiguing, especially when strict discipline is avoided. Fatigue, in the end produces irritation, which is likely to express itself somehow, whatever theories the harrassed teacher may have taught himself or herself to believe. The necessary friendliness cannot be preserved by self-control alone. But where it exists, it should be unnecessary to have rules in advance as to how "naughty children" are to be treated, since impulse is likely to lead to the right decision, and almost any decision, and almost every decision will be right if the child feels that you like him. No rules, however wise, are a substitution for affection and tact. (Total Words: 359)

Understanding Children: The Role of Teachers

The modern education is tilted towards privacy of children. It discourages to spend time with them. If they are loved unconditionally, they will do as asked. But it is useless to boss over them. A child dislikes the importance given to him because of his position.

The teachers who understand this interfere in a child's life only necessarily without hurting them.

Over-worked teachers cannot like a child spontaneously. Authors says that giving your child two hours is enough.

The over-worked teachers believe that avoidance of strictness leads to irritation in children. But, rules are unnecessary while befriending a child.

When a teacher is affectionate towards children, impulse often leads to right outcomes.

Lahore city is an ancient center of not only politics but also culture.

The Mughal culture witnessed its apex in this metropolis. Sikh culture was also centered here. The norms of knowledge and literature too belonged to the very place. It was also a hub for mystics. The author of a famous book on mysticism "Kashf-al-Majooab", Hazrat Ali Hajveri famously known as Daata Gunj Bux, is enshrined here as well. Even during the British Raj, Lahore had been the trend-setter in fashion for the entire Hindustan. Even after the inception of Pakistan, the significance of this city did not dwindle.
