Q. 2 Make a précis of the following passage and suggest a suitable title.

(15+5=20)

One of the more profound indicators of how deeply imperial hierarchies infiltrated both colonizer and colonized psyches lies in the psychological architecture of domination—a point often underscored by postcolonial scholars. The former colonial powers, particularly Britain and France, cultivated a civilizational narrative that naturalized their authority, often portraying subjugated populations as complicit in or even beneficiaries of imperial governance. This conceptual framing rendered resistance not only subversive but also irrational in the eyes of the metropole. Yet, the imperial relationship was never unilateral; the colonized, though oppressed, internalized and negotiated imperial norms, often exhibiting ambivalence towards the very structures that marginalized them. For instance, the memory of colonial rule in parts of Africa oscillates between traumatic recall of exploitation and nostalgic evocations of administrative order or educational advancement. While the postcolonial subject may recall arbitrary detentions, cultural erasures, and economic subordination, the former colonizer may perceive decolonization as a historical rupture—a loss not merely of territory but of moral purpose. In this duality, the post-imperial consciousness remains fractured, perpetually interpreting its history through contrasting emotional and ideological lenses.

Q. 3 Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow.

Many people from interior regions of Pakistan, such as Punjab, Sindh, and Balochistan, migrate to Karachi in hopes of a better life. One such person was Bashiran, a young girl from a village in Rahim Yar Khan. When she was twelve, her father decided to move the family to Karachi to improve their future.

In Karachi, an acquaintance helped them find a vacant plot in Gulistan-e-Jauhar owned by a wealthy man named Seth Kareemuddin. Bashiran's father became the watchman of the plot, and the family built a hut there to live in. Soon, the whole family found work: Bashiran, her mother, and sisters started working in homes; her brothers joined repair shops or began training in mechanical work.

Within months, their financial situation improved. Bashiran's father bought an illegal 240-yard plot near Hazara Goth using the family's savings. Around Ramadan, a relative advised them to also collect charity like Zakat and Fitrana from wealthy employers. From then on, they began collecting donations and ration, along with their wages.

Over time, Bashiran's family registered with three welfare organizations and started receiving monthly ration bags. After ten years, the family owned five plots, had bank savings, and ran cars on rent—yet they continued to collect charity as they once did when they were poor.

This story is not unique. Thousands of families working as domestic workers, guards, and drivers continue to receive Zakat and charity despite becoming financially stable. They rarely reveal that they are no longer in need. Some justify this by saying, "No business is bad, and no religion is greater than business."

Even during the COVID-19 pandemic, some well-off workers collected free rations from mosques despite receiving food from their employers. Sadly, many wealthy donors give without verifying the recipients' needs, unintentionally wasting their charity.

Not every worker in humble professions is eligible for Zakat. True dignity lies in self-sufficiency and building one's own identity.

Questions:

- Q1. Why did Bashiran's family continue collecting charity even after becoming financially stable?
- Q2. What can we infer about the effectiveness of charity distribution in Karachi?
- Q3. What message is the writer trying to convey through the phrase: "No business is bad, and no religion is greater than business"?
- Q4. Why might people like Bashiran's family hesitate to stop collecting charity?
- Q5. What does the passage suggest about the long-term impact of unchecked charity practices on society?

Q2 Precis

The imperial system penetrated the psyche of both, colonizers and colonized. Colonial powers like Britain and France cultivated the narrative of civilization in minds of colonizers. The relation was not unilateral because colonized people considered themselves as the beneficiaries of imperial government and followed the norms of imperialists. So, colonization swings between exploitation and educational benefits. Former colonizers ^{also} considered decolonization as the loss of moral purpose.

not only the loss of territory.

Narrative building in Colonization

Q.3

- 1- Beshirvan's family continued collecting charity even after becoming financially stable because they were in habit of collecting and treated it as their business. Such people justify their acts by saying that, "No business is bad, and no religion is greater than business"
- 2- There is no effective distribution of charity in Karachi. The wealthy people donate without verifying whether the person is eligible or not, as every worker in humble profession is not eligible. In this way, the wealth did does not move to those who are deserving and in need of it actually.
- 3- The writer is mocking in this phrase that some people act humble to get benefit. They acted as poor to gain benefits for free because it is like their business. Their poverty is actually their business and they also treated it as their religion.
- 4- X

5- The passage suggests that the unchecked charity in a long run will make those poor stable. But the problem is they will still not stop collecting charity and would stack wealth. The purpose of charity is to remove poverty from society but in this case the poor are getting rich and not allowing wealth to move to really deserving families.

Q.4 Correction

- ii. Neither the teacher nor the students know the answer.
- v. If I would have seen him, I would ^{have told} ~~tell~~ him the truth.

- vii. He is one of those writers who have won many awards.
- iv. She suggested me to have a break.
- iii. Being a doctor, he diagnosed the illness quickly.

Q.5 A. Punctuation

As the rain poured outside, the detective turned to the suspect and said, "I know you're hiding something." The suspect looked away, then muttered, "what makes you think that?". "Your silence" for one replied the detective. "Besides, you were seen near the warehouse that night". "That's impossible" he snapped, "I was out of the town". "Really" the detective leaned forward and placed a photo on the table, "Care to explain this?" Then the suspect stared at the image, his eyes narrowing, "Where did you get that?", he whispered. "That does not matter", said the detective, "what matters is the truth".

Q.7

Translation

Ramanujan was a British - Indian mathematician whose work is still used in space technology. He could not get admission in college because of inappropriate circumstances and lack of interest in subjects other than maths. A British professor Hardy took him to Cambridge where he was awarded with BA degree. 2520 was his discovery. The beauty of this number is that it divides all every number from one to ten. This genius died at the age of 32 in 1920 due to not getting proper meal in Britain. There is a feature built on him in India.
