Our thrilling adventure to Qualla Boundary

Confused about a vacation spot last May, I was delighted at John's recommendation to visit Cherokee in Oklahoma. We visited the town Qualla Boundary with great mountaineous views. The town displayed its historical life through tribal crafts and live shows at night. Souvenir shops had a collection of tomahawks and war bonnets with tents placed around. We had a conversation with George, an English-speaking native who shared his past struggles. He mentioned that Cherokees have different means of livelihood. Bingo Weekends was a popular job for locals with good revenue and lots of fun. Lastly, we visited the museum which had a collection of baskets, carvings, etc. The trip was a memorable event and makes me wish for similar experiences in the future
