

Translator

QUESTION : 07 (2016)

People generally believe that the state's constitution citizen's liberty are at odds with each other. Apparently this doesn't seem wrong. Every law puts some restrictions on the citizens. If the country has too many laws then the cumulative restrictions also increase. The citizen's freedom gets crushed under the weight of excessive restrictions. On the contrary, the fewer the laws, the wider the orbit of citizen's liberty.