The Core for Rural Development: Productivity

Rural development is compulsory for development strategy. This is the way to increase their productivities due to majority people are still lived there. Rural income is far less than urban as under-employment exists in that areas. Due to poverty people migrate to urban areas, so the talented people come there to fulfill their dreams. The people prefer urban residence as rural societies lack infrastructure and facilities for business elements. The past agricultural development programmes would have expanded for physical and social infrastructure progress. It is mandatory to provide modern facilities to rural people for improving their capabilities while retaining their cultural heritage.
