

If wants were horses even beggars would ride

The proverb "If wants were horses even beggars would ride". This means if you want to have something or you are wishing for something, you must need to work for it, to achieve it without effort one can not achieve their desires. Only wishing it is not enough, even beggars can wish a lot of things to have bank balance a luxurious life, but without efforts desires, are of no value. If someone wants to ride a horse they must have it. Money resources are necessary for achieving dreams but some desires are unrealistic, e.g. wishing to change your past or have a good health when you are unhealthy. Some wishes can not be fulfill although you have money or resources. Therefore, all the needs and wants can not be achieve at once. Some desires that you achieve without working lose their charm. The process of working for a desire gives you more satisfaction than only wishing for it.
