

Social Structure and Socio-Culture Problems of Former Colonies

Culture of a Society has two aspects: external; formal aspect and inner; ideological aspect. The external aspect is roughly an organized outcome of inner aspect and both constitute Social Structure.

Cultural problems cannot be helped in isolation from social issues; political and economic relationship.

These problems originated primarily from the imperialist-colonialist domination. European imperialist seized the social and cultural development of Asian, African and Latin American countries. Some of them, feudal Societies were limited to the upper class only and other was frozen until the coming of political independence. Colonial and imperialism domination intensified social and cultural fragmentation. It formed a division between tribal and national groups. These structures are the legacy by newly liberated countries from their colonial grip.

Words in Passage = 354

Words in Precis = 121