

Instruction in youth is like engraving in stone.

Outline

A) Introduction:

Thesis Statement: Education in youth shapes lifelong values, making them responsible citizens. Early exposure to innovation fosters creativity, leading to long-term technological advancements. Financial literacy in youth ensures better economic participation, improving living standards permanently, along with many other factors proves that instruction in youth is like engraving in stone.

B) Instruction in youth is like engraving in stone:

- i) Education in youth shapes lifelong values, making them responsible citizens;

Evidence: UNESCO study (2019) found that students who receive civic education were more responsible than others.

- ii) Early exposure to innovation fosters creativity, leading to long-term technological advancements;

Evidence: Silicon valley tech leaders were exposed to coding and entrepreneurship in their youth.

- iii) Financial literacy in youth ensures better economic participation, improving living standards permanently;

Evidence: Australia's mandatory financial literacy program in schools reduced youth debt by 22%. (OECD, 2021).

- iv) Teaching conflict resolution to youth creates cooperative mindset, leading to lasting peace and security;

Evidence: A Harvard study (2021) showed that students trained in mediation skills were 50% less likely to engage in violence.

- v) Gender equality education breaks patriarchal stereotypes, creating a lasting culture of women rights;

Evidence: UNICEF reports that girls educated on their rights marry lates and earn higher incomes.

- vi) Skill development in youth ensures a competent workforce, sustaining long-term economic growth;

Evidence: World Bank estimates that 1 additional year of schooling boosts GDP growth by 0.37% annually.

- vii) Civic education instills discipline, ensuring long-term law and order in society;

Evidence: A Brookings study (2022) found that schools with civic engagement programs saw 30% fewer juvenile arrests.

- viii) Vocational training prepares youth for sustainable livelihoods, reducing lifelong poverty;

Evidence: World Bank report (2023) proved that vocational training graduates earn 25% more than untrained peers.

- ix) Entrepreneurship education encourages self-reliance, creating lasting job opportunities;

Evidence: A Harvard Business Review study (2022) linked youth entrepreneurship programs to higher regional job Creation.

- x) Mentorship in youth ensures professional growth, leading to lifelong career success;

Evidence: The journal of Applied psychology proved mentorship reduces career stagnation by 50%.

- xi) Overcoming challenges in early years builds resilience, shaping strong future leaders;

Evidence: Malala Yousafzai's early activism made her global education icon.

- xii) Environmental education cultivates lifelong sustainable habits;

Evidence: A study in Nature sustainability (2022) found that students exposed to climate education adopt eco-friendly practices as adult.

c) Conclusion:

The Express Tribune revealed that early instruction in youth prepares them for the rest of life. This means that when students are early exposed to learning, they retain this knowledge to use it in practical life. The statement "instruction in youth is like engraving in stone" implies that the teaching instilled in youth at early years has lasting impact on their lives as the engraving in stone has everlasting impact. Early education in youth shapes lifelong values and make them responsible citizens. Similarly, Early exposure to innovation foster creativity and entrepreneurship education encourage self-reliance, creating lasting job opportunities. In the same way, financial literacy ensures better economic participation. Further, teaching conflict resolution create cooperative mindset. Moreover, gender equality education breaks stereotypes, creating environment of women rights. Hence,

We can conclude that instruction in youth is like engraving in stone.