Title: A Trip to Cherokee.

The writer wanted to go for vacation. A place which was not ^{only} too mainstream and crowded, but also unique and thrilling. So he went to Cherokee upon his friends recommendation. The town Qualla Boundary had everything the writer anticipated in a trip. From history to scenery, to culture and infrastructure, and from people to souvenir shops. Most people did not speak English and relied heavily on tourism for survival. The innovations in latter, like the Bingo Weekend brought heavy returns for the locals. The writer cherished the place and wish wished to go somewhere equally exotic next time.
