

Paragraph-Writing Lack of Professionalism in Pakistan

Professionalism is something which every profession have imbedded in their structure. But, unfortunately I hardly see this in any profession in Pakistan. Every Professional takes its task very lightly that there is no need to adopt any rules. In Pakistan, especially in government sectors employees takes their profession very lightly, not even bother to speak politely with clients. They even have no knowledge how to sit properly in an office, to behave mannerly to outsiders. And also no skills to manage things at desk, untidy environment around ^{them} makes an outsider wonder and also feel one person uncomfortable and questionable. Government Banks have lots of untidy and rushed surroundings as compared to private banks. Private Banks are very tidy, calm environment and when someone enters that person feels good. And also the dealings of private and government sectors are much different.

Government sectors always try to delay every matter and private sectors tries to address as soon as they can. But in

However, in some cases, private and public sectors goes hand on hand. There is a lot of need of mannerism, professionalism in public and private sectors.

Therefore, special courses should be introduced, workshops should be organized for coping this problem. In this way, Pakistan should meet professionalism standards which other countries adopting.
