

2016 Precis

During my vacation last May, I decided to go to Cherokee, a county in the state of Oklahoma, along with my friend John, who suggested it. We went to Qualla Boundary, a town in Cherokee, surrounded by magnificent mountain scenery, the town presented the 18th century lifestyles and a brief image of Cherokee's past to the tourists. Afterwards, we went to souvenir shop where an old man named George invited us for lunch. He started with his story of how difficult it was to get a living, and the fact that Cherokee do not depend solely on trade for survival. Our final stop at the museum in Qualla Boundary where arts of various kinds were displayed. It was an amazing place and I would love to go to another place of same kind.
