

Passage.

If then a practical end must be assigned to a University course, I say it is that of training good members of a society. It is the art of social life, and its end is fitness for the world. It neither confines its views to particular professions on the one hand, nor creates heroes or inspires genius on the other. Works indeed of genius fall under no art; heroic minds come under no rule; a University is not a birthplace of poets or of immortal authors, of founders of schools, leaders of colonies, or conquerors of nations. It does not promise a generation of Aristotle or Newtons or Napoleons or Washingtons of Raphaels or Shakespearcs though such miracles of nature it has before now contained within its precincts. Nor is it content on the other hand with forming the critic or the experimentalist, the economist or the engineer, through such too it includes within its scope. But a University training is the great ordinary means to a great ordinary end; it aims at raising the intellectual tone of society, at cultivating the public mind, at purifying the national taste, at supplying true principles to popular aspirations. It is the education which gives a man a clear conscious view of his own opinions and judgments, a truth in developing them, an eloquence in expressing them, and a force in urging them, it teaches him to see things as they are, to go right to the point, to disentangle a skein of thought, to detect what is sophistical and to discard what is irrelevant. It prepares him to fill any post with credit, and to master any subject with facility. (John H. Newman)

Indent the paragraph. University course to Social Refinement $\frac{1}{2}$ Intell& and

If university course had a purpose, it would be to train responsible citizens. Universities teach how to live in the world and they do not limit themselves to any particular profession. Universities do not produce geniuses. The approach of universities is ordinary. University education raises social intelligence and develops minds of nation. It gives people awareness about their abilities, opinions and fluency in expression. It teaches man to be realistic, precise and a problem solver. It makes a person fit for any role and able to master any subject with ease. (100/300 words)

Idea and grammar are ok. Decent attempt.