

Man is the architect of his own fate

① Outline ① Introduction Thesis Statement

Good well organised and quite relevant

Man is the architect of his own fate because his success or failure ultimately depends upon the choices he makes and the efforts he puts forth.

2 Man is the architect of his own fate

2.1 conscious decisions determine our outcomes. The path you follow is set by the choice you make; not choosing is also a choice that shapes results.

2.2 clear goals direct efforts towards results.

when aims are defined, time and energy move in one direction instead of being scattered.

2.3 prioritization aligns time with what matters most.

Ranking tasks ensures important work is done first and trivial work does not consume the day.

2.0 Education empowers man to ~~open~~ opportunities knowledge and skills open doors to success and progress

Time management utilize opportunities proper use of time ensure productivity and prevents waste.

3. People blame others instead of accepting responsibility

3.1 people attribute failure to fate or destiny to escape guilt.

3.2 fear of criticism makes them shift blame on external factors

3.3 cultural belief in luck weaken personal effort comfort in excuses delays self-improvement

4. The role of external factors in shaping fate (acknowledging reality)

This angle is quite interesting good

Circumstances may influence opportunities but not final outcome.

5. Social environment can support or obstruct progress unforeseen events (illness, disasters) may cause temporary setbacks.
