"The Essay"

"Prosperity is not a gift, it is a fruit of deliberate actions and wise choices." by Lee Kuan Yew, a revolutionist who transformed Singapore to economic powerhouse. The statement is so related to Pakistan for its prosperity. A state with plenty of hidden treasures of natural resources and mineral mines, fertile land, geo-strategic location connecting South Asia, Central Asia and Middle East, and an unmatched and priceless young talent. 78 years have been passed, yet it is on the same list of developing countries. All this is due to several reasons like weak political structure, social disparities, military interventions and weak implementation of policies. Now, it is the time to decide and make wise long-term decisions that would ensure its sustainable, stable and prosperous future. By addressing social empowerment, environmental sustainability, political stability, economic transformation and international engagement. By focusing on these areas, Pakistan can overcome its challenges, unlock its potential and can secure better future for its upcoming generations.

Education plays a vital role in a Nation's Progress. Due to this very reason the head of state of Germany still calls himself a Chancellor rather President or King. According to the World Bank Report of 2024, Pakistan is a developing country where 64% of its population consists of youth below age 30. and its literacy rate is around 57.02% where girls and rural communities lag behind. The schools are many but lack inadequate facilities and outdated curricula. To utilize the fresh potential to their fullest, quality education should be provided to all based on critical thinking and analytical skills, technology driven and practical exposure. At the same time, the young <sup>people</sup> should be given chance in the field of entrepreneurship, leadership and technical expertise. This not only will help in the development of young persons but will enrich the overall Pakistan economy with the unique and innovative ideas. The public and private sectors should give a platform to them and transform its demographic advantage into skilled and productive workforce having the capability of driving social and economic progress.

Women makes 49% of Pakistan's total population out of which only 22% is in labour force according to World Bank Report. A nation where almost half of its population is comprised of female, should make wise decisions to fully utilise this sector. Providing them easy access to education, healthcare and equal job opportunities. In the rural areas, many females are running small businesses at home on self-finance and with great difficulties. By investing on these small and Medium Enterprises through micro-finance programs, assists them to earn their living properly. By providing representation in Public affairs and politics, will not only support women empowerment but will also boost gender equality. One of the recent example is the visit of neighbouring country Iran where the delegation was comprised of female ministers. This symbolises that women are not just meant for households but can also be leaders and representatives of their country. By facilitating females in this manner, can be a very progressive step for Pakistan creating a fair, productive and resilient society.

Moving forward, Poverty alleviation and Social Inclusion is another social factor playing a vital role in Pakistan's progress. According to the latest updates by World Bank, 44.7% of Pakistan's population is living below poverty line. Such community is deprived of basic fundamental needs and facilities like education, healthcare and community rights.

This is an alarming situation for Pakistan. To overcome this widespread issue, government must implement measures like Ehsas Program to eradicate poverty.

Providing financial support and any skill through which they can earn their living, affordable quality education, open new ventures for them and like-wise. This will assist in Social Inclusion in a manner that everyone could get an equal chance to take part in economy development.

Every person either children, young, women, rural community or minority will play their active role in society betterment due to sense of recognition and being heard. By overcoming on poverty and through social inclusion, Pakistan can empower its citizens, reduce inequalities and enhance skilled labour force, resulting in its long term productivity and progress.
