Q. 2 Make a précis of the following passage and suggest a suitable title. (15+5=20)

In every epoch, civilizations have adorned themselves with the veneer of progress, yet beneath the dazzling exterior, an insidious corrosion spreads unseen. The modern temper, intoxicated with speed, invention, and the feverish multiplication of desires, has cultivated a landscape where the grandeur of acquisition eclipses the subtler music of conscience. Palaces of glass and steel rise, fortunes are conjured in markets that never sleep, and the human creature, dazzled by abundance, scarcely notices the invisible impoverishment that accompanies such plenty. It is precisely in the midst of this brilliant tumult that the gravest reversal has taken place: the scales of value, once weighed in character and honour, have been recalibrated to favour the clang of coin over the calm of virtue. The sanctuary of the home, the tribunal of learning, the very pulpits that should have stood as custodians of higher impulses, now stand compromised, bartering their dignity for the gleam of material advantage. In boardrooms, stratagems are no longer measured by fairness but by profit; in the corridors of power, policy bows before the idol of wealth; in human dealings, affection itself is often appraised by the currency of benefit. The tyrannies born of this inversion are manifold: the fracture of trust between neighbour and neighbour, the degradation of institutions once built to enoble, and the pitiable spectacle of intellect bent not to enlightenment but to schemes of avarice. What were once the slow, luminous labours of a conscience striving for balance—honesty, forbearance, and humility—are now dismissed as quaint relics, replaced by an unbridled appetite to possess. The new century, with all its mechanisms and magnifications, has taught man to reach outward and grasp, but not to look inward and judge. In such an atmosphere, wealth becomes the only oracle, and character a silent beggar at its door. The paradox of this glittering achievement is that it leaves the spirit famished; comfort expands, yet contentment contracts. Unless a reclamation of moral sensibility interrupts this ceaseless covetousness, the splendour of our progress will merely light a theatre where a hollow humanity enacts its decline beneath the brilliant chandeliers of its own prosperity.

Q. 3 Read the following passage carefully and answer the questions that follow. (20)

The sudden outbreak of hostilities between India and Pakistan on 10 May 2025 marked a watershed moment in the history of South Asian conflicts. Unlike previous encounters, this confrontation was not confined to the roar of tanks or the thunder of artillery. At the very outset, as Indian squadrons approached, Pakistan's advanced air-defence system shot down five Rafales before they could even cross into its airspace, a decisive blow that stunned military observers. Yet, Pakistan did not limit its response to defensive manoeuvres; in a swift and calibrated retaliation, its missile batteries and long-range artillery struck selected military installations, forcing the Indian capital into an unexpected blackout that paralyzed communications and spread panic in New Delhi.

However, the greater surprise came immediately afterward when Pakistan, rather than escalating the conventional battle, opened an invisible front in the digital domain. Alongside these air and artillery victories, simultaneously unveiled a sophisticated cyber-warfare strategy. In a matter of hours, its cyber units disabled enemy command systems, blinded satellite networks, silenced air defence radars, and disrupted encrypted communications. The battlefield, for the first time, shifted from the plains and skies to a hidden theatre of codes and signals, where no further gunpowder was spent yet entire formations were rendered ineffective.

The effect was staggering. The remaining Rafales never dared to fly again. As the magnitude of the technological disruption became apparent, nations that once stood aloof during Indo-Pak crises began to speak. Western powers, wary of further escalation, criticized India's aggressive posture, while regional powers expressed open support for Pakistan. For the first time in decades, India found itself diplomatically cornered and without a credible ally to defend its stance.

Even more remarkable was the transformation in the Middle East. In a region where Pakistan had often been treated with disdain, Arab leaders, deeply impressed by its mastery of digital warfare and its disciplined conduct, began to regard it as a formidable power. What had long been a bruised national pride was suddenly restored. This reawakening of respect also strengthened strategic partnerships throughout the region. Pakistan's preparedness demonstrated that the future of war lies not merely in conventional might but in the ability to dominate the digital arena, where battles are fought invisibly yet decided decisively.

Questions:

- Q1. Why did Arab leaders change their attitude towards Pakistan after the conflict?
- Q2. How did the blackout in Delhi influence the psychological state of India during the conflict?
- Q3. If Pakistan had not launched digital warfare after the missile retaliation, how would the conflict have turned out differently?
- Q4. Compare and contrast the role of traditional military force and digital warfare as described in the passage. Which one proved more decisive and why?
- Q5. If the events of 10 May 2025 were to be viewed as a turning point, what does the episode reveal about the changing meaning of "power" in the 21st century?

QNO. 2

Title:

The Rise of Materialism Declines Morality

10
AI

The progress of many civilizations merely weighed through their exterior, but their inner contentments are mostly ignored. Similarly, modern world with faster lives, technological advancements, and unlimited growing desires have masked real moral values. Hence, materialism has heavily dominated morality. Now the world is in the midst of reversal phase. Once favouring justice, trust, and dignity, the policies and institutions are now inclined towards wealth. This reversal entails grave consequences like growing trust deficits and degradation of institutions. Majority of men now endeavour to exploit resources and they have forgotten the significance of inner scrutiny. Although wealth brings comfort, yet it greatly undermines inner peace. Hence, the progress of humanity is only possible if moral sensibility rises which will raise conscience about the real wealth.

Q NO.3

Ans: The Arab leaders changed their attitudes towards Pakistan after the conflict because they were heavily influenced by the controlled yet powerful response of Pakistan against India. The Arab world was shocked at the unexpected and organized retaliation, and cyber warfare capability of Pakistan in the recent conflict. It not only restored nations' pride back in the region but also strengthened strategic partnership with the Arab World.

2.

Ans: The blackout in Delhi shattered the psychological state of Indian public during the conflict. Pakistan's surgical strikes by long-range artillery and advanced missiles targeted selected military installations in India, which led to loss of communication networks and produced chaos and fear across the Indian capital.

3.

Ans: If Pakistan had not launched digital warfare after missile retaliation, then the war could have escalated ~~in~~ an unexpected way. It would have proven destructive for both the India and Pakistan. The escalation chances were apparent from rigid stance of Indian leaders that might have reached at the verge of nuclear war.

4.

Ans. Both the ~~roles of~~ traditional military force and digital warfare were commendable. The conventional military forces responded swiftly and shot down highly advanced French Rafalecr with the help of Pakistan's air defence system even before their entry into Pakistan. On the other hand, cyber warfare turned the conflict into an unexpected direction. The cyber warfare strategy of Pakistan proved more decisive because it disrupted enemy's defence systems, satellites, radars and communication networks. Without more bloodshed, it de-escalated the dangerous war in South Asia.

5.

Ans: The changing meaning of "power" in 21st century means the shift of power magnitude from mere traditional war to the digital arena. Now traditional alongwith convention war, cyber warfare strategy is also significant to produce formidable retaliation against the enemy ~~as~~ that is fought in invisible way.
