Nationalism Vs Humanism : A Philosophical Debate.

According to Homi K Bhabha, Nations lose their origins with time and only achieve their full potentials in imagination. National identity is constructed by myth, imagination and material. However, nations are constructed through history and shaped by ethnic and regional affiliations. That is why, national identities are rigid and exclusive in nature - against the idea of humanism envisioned by Socrates and Plato. Al-Ghazali work emphasises on cultural exchange and understanding. It promotes balance between love for one's land and justice for all citizens. In another work of work of Ghazali, a balance between Universalism and particularism is being advocated. Hence, Ghazali promotes inclusive citizenship with idea of justice and equality. Bhabha's work also promotes new form of global citizenship with shared humanity. As nationalism curbs creativity and blurs between patriotism and xenophobia. On one hand, nationalism promotes unity & pluralism while on the other hand it promotes the desire to dominate that results in bloodshed in Palestine. Nationalism is scary with failing democracy. According to Allama Iqbal, democracy is outer crust, essence of nationalism lies in imperialism. Nationalism supports distasteful hegemony behind the concept of love for the land. Weaker nations are more inclined towards the idea of border integrity and nationalism due to the fear of stronger nations. Imperialism along with nationalism limits a person on the path of self-determination. The power of nationalism can both divide and unite people. An approach is needed that balances that balances national pride with universal values and human rights.
