Question :- 2 Precis

Attacking The Man, NOT The Argument.

The Passage explains the fallacy of ad hominem, in which a person attacks an opponent instead of addressing the argument.

The example shows that how lawyers sometimes discredit the opponent rather than the case.

However, the story of Lincoln illustrates that how cleverly he mocked his opponents' shift to influence the jury and won. This method is very old and has been used since the time of the sophists. Even leaders like Eisenhower and Roosevelt faced such personal attacks. The author explains that ad hominem arguments mislead people by shifting focus from issues to personalities.
